His Glimpse of War

By R. W. KEENAN

Copyright, 1910, by American Press

In 1870, having been just graduated feet and scalp, etc., which are liable from college, I went abroad to see to affect one anywhere. In quickly something of the world before settling to my life work. There was a great poslam, which has accomplished such deal to see at that time-namely, one of the biggest wars of modern times. The Germans under Von Moitke were become a veritable household remedy marching across the French border. Landing at Cherbourg, I went directly to Paris and, taking letters from the American minister, set out for the front to get a glimpse of war. Having been ten years too late in my birth to take part in our own great struggle in America, I was extremely desirous to witness a similar contest between the French and the Germans. I was received kindly at the headquarters of Marshal MacMahon, but there were few great battles, and the two nations did not seem disposed to fight one for the benefit of a young American who had come across an ocean to see "the fun." So after remaining for a time with the French I determined to join the Germans. 1 realized that passing from one army to its opposing one during actual war was a serious business, but I had heard so much of the thrilling episodes of war from friends who had fought in the American contest that my young blood was fired to participate in a similar affair. So, selecting a point between the lines where the French had no outposts, I left them and, walking down a road, was taken in by a Prussian vedette.

This was rather a tame adventure, and I was on the lookout for some thing more exciting. Though I was not aware of it, something more exciting was on the lookout for me.

I presented my credentials, which were my passport and my letters to the French commanders. I had struck the troops under General Manteufel. and it was at his beadquarters that the documents were examined. I was treated with the utmost civility by the officers of his staff. Indeed, I could not but contrast the attention I received with that of the French officers, who upon the statement of the American minister, vouching for me, permitted me to go pretty much where I pleased, but paid little heed to me. The Prussians showered me with attentions,

"I am being watched," she said, "Watched?" "Yes; they know my mission."

"What mission?" "I must decline, my dear young quarters. I was receiving my instruc tions while you were there. Save me! "They know that MacMahon has one into their lines for information. If you take the risk for a time I will go free. If suspected you can prove that you are an American and will not suffer. I cannot prove that I am not a Frenchwoman. Here is the information I bear. Take it. If they find it on me I die, Keep it for me till the danger is past, then give it to She thrust a little roll of tissue paper
